

TALK like a LEADER

Grant Ainsley's keynote presentation makes people in organizations think about the importance of communication and how they can immediately get better at a skill they use every day.

Even though most business leaders spend the overwhelming majority of their time in some type of an interpersonal situation, "communication pain" costs organizations time and money. One study estimates poor communication costs $525,000 a year for the average 100 employee company.

Ainsley's presentation gives you the following:

- Understanding what communication really is and how it works
- Why good communication is much more than just a person "talking a lot"

- How to send proper emails and text messages and leave great voicemails
- How to prepare for and have difficult conversations with employees and others
- Understanding why body language plays such an important role
- How to build a great communications culture within your organization

Talk Like a Leader can also be delivered in a workshop format with video role-playing, so participants can learn how to master difficult conversations, providing immediate improvements and benefits to you and your company.
